Our "palace" in Slovakia

Sunday, July 31, 2016

DH and I are in Bratislava studying Slovak language and culture. Last time we took this course we lived in the dorm. The students were very nice to their old classmates but this time we rented an apartment in "old town" close to the university and the Danube where I can run every morning before class.

This building was once a palace and now renovated into individual apartments. There are huge doors which swing open upon card entry with an ancient creaking noise.

We enter into a lovely garden courtyard complete with some old stone cannonballs.

Our 1 bedroom apartment is up there on the 3rd floor.

We are right next door to the national theater and a main square where last night there was a demonstration of folk dancing. The audience was invited to the stage to learn as well. Many young people joined. We watched. Our course has workshops in singing and dancing. I will definitely sing, but after last night I just might expand my comfort zone and dance too.

Great pictures, sounds like fun too. Sure you should go for the dancing. It lightens the heart as does the singing. Enjoy the stay.

How lovely. The idea of an apartment is wonderful -- you're "real people" living normal life.

You must dance! You'll have the same vital, vibrant feeling that singing gives. You'll have fun!

Wow! It makes me miss my time in the USAF when we got to tour around Greece and Germany. Such history to be seen in the buildings in Europe, our country is such a baby in comparison.
